'Bakwit': From flight to plight

Manila Standard

Residents seek access to no-go zones despite threat of 'big bang' eruption

By MJ Blancaflor

AUTHORITIES were struggling Wednesday to keep thousands of evacuees from returning to homes in areas threatened by a feared massive eruption of Taal Volcano.

Some 40,000 people have taken refuge in shelters since the volcano last blew a towering burst of ash and jet of lava on Sunday.

Police subsequently set up no-go zones and mandatory evacuations in areas to west around Taal, which is about 45 kilometers south of Manila. But days later, locals are leaving partitions and demanding access, even as the national geological agency warns the volcano could unleash a more powerful eruption at any time.

Calicut became the second no-go zone after Batangas to declare a state of calamity following the eruption as ash continued to blanket homes and farms, including its famed coffee and pineapple plantations.

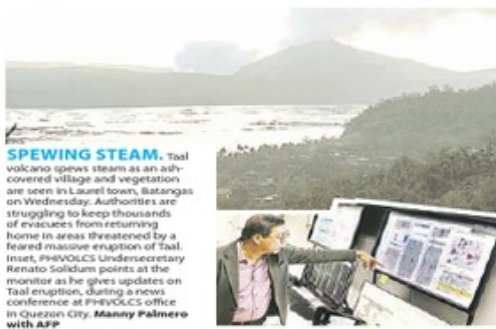

In a radio interview, Cavite Gov. Joaquin Remulla said the provincial board passed Resolution No. 1155-

Deadly calm: Main crater lake drained of water

By Rio N. Araja

A DESTRUCTIVE and deadly eruption could still be in the works even though Taal Volcano appeared calm. Wednesday, the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology said. "The explosive eruption scenario, and this is the scenario we have been preparing for in gear with the Batangas Provincial Risk Reduction and Management Office, is still possible simply because... we still have a lot of earthquakes and ground deformation within the area," PHIVOLCS director Renato Solidum said in an interview on ANC Headstart.

The agency also said the volcano's continued activity has drained its main crater lake of water as seen in new satellite images and drone video footage.

Marvin Bermeo, chief of PHIVOLCS Monitoring and Eruption Prediction Division, said the dried lake was related to the movement of magma up the volcano, but said it was not a sign.

Taal in mind, Duterte wants calamity-proof evac centers

By MJ Blancaflor and Macon Ramos-Araneta

WITH survivors of the Taal Volcano eruption in mind, President Rodrigo Duterte has ordered the construction of additional evacuation centers that can withstand calamities as strong as Super Typhoon "Yolanda" before his term ends in 2017.

At the Taal situation briefing in Batangas City on Tuesday night the President said the government should give priority to the establishment of the shelter in calamity-prone areas such as Marikina Valley.

"We'll build a very strong evacuation center. Not as strong as the Titanic and then saying that even God cannot sink the ship because God will really destroy your evacuation center," Duterte said.

But I have something really strong.

Horse sense: Rescuing a livelihood

THE horses were still called in grey ash as they stepped off the boat, lucky beneficiaries of a risky rescue mission to ground zero of the Philippines' Taal volcano eruption.

These owners are among many small operators who rely on the modest money generated by the horse's ferrying to survive up the volcano, a popular attraction stung by a sweeping lull.

But when Taal exploded to life on Sunday afternoon, the community who own hundreds of foals on volcano island, had to flee without their prized livestock and most of their possessions. "Our lives are in our horses, they're how we make our living," owner Alfredo Dost 42, told AFP on Tuesday after bringing three of his four animals to the mainland.

"We love our horses... that's why we wanted to save them," he added. The creatures can generate $7 each per trip up to the stunning panoramic views above the volcano's main crater, a significant sum in a nation whose million survive on less than $2 a day.

No money for teachers' pay hike — Rody

By MJ Blancaflor

PRESIDENT Rodrigo Duterte has conceded he will not be able to fulfill his promise to increase the wages of public school teachers, saying the government does not have enough funds.

"The teachers are shouting that cannot be. I don't have that big money," President Duterte said Tuesday during a meeting with Cabinet officials in Batangas.

On June 14 last year, Education Secretary Leonor Briones said it was not true she was against increasing the salary of public school teachers. Next page
